Domestic Violence in Later Life

FEATURED ARTICLE: DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AND OLDER ADULTS

Domestic violence does not just affect younger people. It affects all cultures, religions, races, sexual orientations and every age, including older adults.

Often we don't think that someone, especially a family member would violently assault or harm an aging parent or loved one. Unfortunately the abuse of older adults continues and is often at the hands of a family member, leaving the person to live in fear, silently suffering behind closed doors.

As the demographic shift continues, seeing an increase to our senior population, the likelihood of more domestic abuse occurring in the future increases.<sup>1</sup> Those working in the justice sector as well as health care professionals, are increasingly dealing with more and more cases of domestic violence, more so now than in the past.

Shelters are seeing an influx of older women seeking services and assistance, after experiencing domestic violence. In responding to this important social issue, we must ask ourselves: "Are we prepared, trained and are properly resourced to assist these older adults?"

Family violence occurs when someone engages in abusive behaviour to control and/or harm a member of their family or someone with whom they have an intimate relationship. It may include many different forms abuse ranging from physical and emotional to neglect being carried out (Dept. of Justice Canada, 2016)<sup>2</sup>. Those experiencing domestic abuse in later life, also have an on-going relationship with the abuser who is a 'trusted' individual, including a spouse or partner, family member, and/or caregiver.

According to the Family Violence in Canada: A Statistical Profile, 2013, seniors represent a relatively small proportion of all family violence victims, about 3%, and experienced lower rates of family violence than any other age group. While this rate appears low, family violence can have a significant negative impact on the health and well-being of the older adult.

Other findings reported by police, indicate that out of the 4 in 10 seniors, experiencing family violence, the acts are committed primarily by their grown children (43%) and spouses (28%). Similarly as in the case of younger women, spousal violence for senior women was nearly double that of senior men.<sup>3</sup>

The complexities of Domestic Violence in Later Life differ from those towards younger people, particularly in the tactics used to take control of the older adult. An older adults' vulnerability to abuse increases, if there is dependency for care or if there are cognitive impairments due to stroke, dementia and/or physical disabilities that render them unable to protect themselves.

They also encounter significant barriers that inhibit their ability to seek help or report the abuse to authorities. When an older adult's own son or daughter is the person causing them harm - the same person whom they nurtured and raised through life - they find it extremely difficult to tell anyone what is happening. There are overwhelming issues and fears such as: losing that family member in their life – often choosing to live with the abuse. The emotional anxiety of being rejected by other family members or the fear of starting over with little or no financial resources to do so, are all very real challenges and considerations for the older adult. Having to worry about housing or about being placed into a long-term care home, or not having knowledge about community supports and what will happen if reported or whether rights can be taken away or not.<sup>4,6</sup> Domestic violence may take on different forms at various stages in a person's later life.

The term Domestic Violence Grown Old is a longstanding phrase used for long-term spouses and intimate partner relationships, where abuse began and continued throughout the marriage. This is often referred to 'early-onset domestic violence'.

'Late-onset domestic violence' occurs in long-term relationships/marriages, which can unexpectedly lead to violence, perhaps triggered by an event or significant life change. Examples of such changes are: retirement, disability or having to care for the spouse in failing health. In addition, late onset violence may also be attributed to cognitive impairments common in aging, like those brought on by stroke, Alzheimer's Disease or substance abuse (alcoholism), causing aggressive and violent behaviors in otherwise ordinary, respectful marriages.<sup>5</sup>

The growth of the older adult population in Ontario, coupled with the number of new and complex cases of domestic violence coming to the attention of police, justice services and courts, highlights the need to re-examine prevention and intervention programs. The following are a few key actions to support older adult victims of Domestic Violence:

- Community collaboration and a coordinated response with justice partners, community health and social service providers.
- New approaches/models to address high-risk complex cases. For example, Durham Region recently initiated 'Aged HART' (High Risk Action Review Team), a collaborative approach to older adults involved in the criminal justice system.
- Trainings on screening and assessment for domestic violence of older adults, for justice partners, health and social support services. In October 2015, EAO held a 2 day training on the Elder Abuse Risk Assessment Tool (EARA)
- Further education and outreach to older adults, to better understand the issue and gaining knowledge of how / where to seek support.
- Public Awareness Campaigns and availability of materials to bring greater awareness to this increasingly prevalent societal issue.

Research & Reports

Community Consultations :

The Law Commission of Ontario (LCO) released its Interim Report on Legal Capacity, Decision-making and Guardianship with an invitation to members of the public, including older adults and persons with disabilities, to participate in the consultation process.

The Interim Report includes draft recommendations designed to respond to concerns about Ontario's laws, addressing situations where decisions are needed but decision-making abilities by an individual are in question.

In particular, these concerns include:

- the misuse or abuse of Powers of Attorney (PoAs)
- the inappropriate or excessive intervention in the lives of persons with disabilities that may affect their decision-making abilities
- the means available to individuals and families to enforce rights or resolve disputes in this area, and the effective implementation of these laws.

The LCO anticipates releasing a Final Report in 2017.

NATIONAL SENIORS STRATEGY

Make Addressing Ageism, Elder Abuse and Social Isolation a National Priority

With a growing number of Canadians, health and social care professionals, economists, and national organizations are suggesting it's time for a National Senior Strategy. This website has been conceived as a way to provide an evidence-based view on how to consider the concepts that could and should be considered and included in a national approach. Read here.
